Comments

Global stock markets took a much needed breather in January. The turnaround in the 10-month upward trend (since March 2009) came in mid-January and was sparked by China where government had initiated measures to cool down the economy. This reignited investors' concerns regarding the extent and sustainability of the still fragile global economic recovery, and risk aversion returned to the markets. The MSCI World Index declined by 4,2% and the MSCI Emerging Markets Index by 5,7% in US dollars.

Risk aversion resulted in a flight to US treasuries, with the US dollar strengthening and bond yields in the US dropping. The USA government 30-year bond yielded a total return of 3,0% for January, but the return from global bonds was somewhat more subdued due to the stronger dollar. We continue to believe that global bond yields are in a rising trend and that this asset class is therefore not offering value at present.

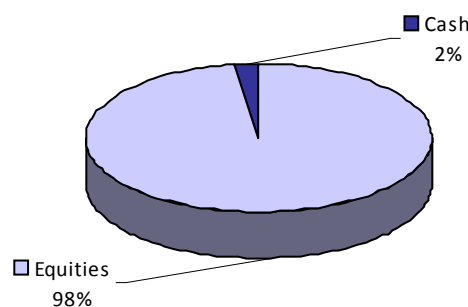

The strength of the US dollar continued into the new year, reaching a six-month high against the euro on the back of greater confidence by the Federal Reserve in the economic recovery. The dollar was also stronger against the British pound but lost ground against the yen.

A strong US dollar put pressure on commodities during January, with the CRB Index losing 6,3% and Brent Crude 8,3%. The gold price held up relatively well in the face of a strong dollar.

Collective Investment Schemes in Securities (CIS) are generally medium to long term investments. The value of participatory interests may go down as well as up and past performance is not necessarily a guide to the future. CIS are traded at ruling prices and can engage in borrowing and scrip lending. A schedule of fees and charges and maximum commissions is available on request from the company/scheme. Commission and incentives may be paid and if so, would be included in the overall costs. Forward pricing is used. Fluctuations or movements in exchange rates may cause the value of underlying international investments to go up or down. This fund may be closed.
